In his reference to the President, Kenna spoke as though he owned one side of him and had a mortgage on the other half, and reminded as of the parishioner's comment upon his preacher who said that "The parson prays as though he is on mighty shalliar terms with the Almighty." The speeches did no harm to the Republican cause.

They have been so secret in their movements since coming here that they have escaped the reporters until now, and so far the object of their visit cannot be ascertained for the reason that Mr. Furthman has gone to Chicago, and betective Suffield, although still in the city, could not be seen to-day. It is surmised, however, that they came here to investigate the deceased beef question, as Mr. Jamison, who is said to be a Chicago banker, and also to be identified with a Chicago beef firm, arrived on the same day, and is helieved to have been cago hanker, and also to be identified with a Chicago beef firm, arrived on the same day, and is believed to have been working with them. Another theory is to the effect that they are on the trail of the murderer Tascott.

The room is beautifully decorated with forest leaves, flowers, fruits, &c.
Objects of interest is the "grapes of Eschol" and the "horn of plenty," full of fine fruits of every kind.

The fruit and confectionary tables are well laden with catables, tempting and delicious, and the ladies who preside at them are courteous and attentive. The fancy table is tastefully arranged with choice articles for home decoration.

Another attraction is the "red pond,"

Saturday night and no trace of him has since ideo discovered. Searching parties were organized in Stephentown and Sahal and for two days the woods and mountains have been explored without result.
